Litigation Support

Brown Williams&rsquo; clients may find themselves involved in litigation to resolve differences that have arisen between themselves and other parties. The litigation may be before state or federal courts or before regulatory agencies. The matters covered may include bankruptcy, financial distress or ongoing operating and regulatory issues. These matters often involve substantial sums of money, important ongoing regulatory principles and considerable expenditures of time and resources. Our consultants have considerable experience evaluating business situations, analyzing complex contracts and in applying appropriate accounting principles. Litigation settings typically involve many parties with many differing concerns and interests. Brown Williams helps you, our client, by providing policy and technical assistance. We help with developing strategy, assessing options, determining regulatory implications, preparing financial studies, preparing and negotiating settlements, presenting testimony, training witnesses, computing damages, and assisting legal counsel at trial and in the briefing, rehearing and appeal processes.
